“ No one is ever ready to say "Rest in peace". No one is ever ready to loose a loved one. I can't lie the bond me and Daijha shared was real. You'd always catch us laughing and smiling. I remember moments where we'd have crazy dreams and text each other about them and try to figure out why we had that dream. We had many classic moments of skating, going to chuck e cheese, riding the Staten Island Ferry jus to clear our minds of all the craziness in our lives. I remember moments where we would jus ask each other random things jus to see what the other was thinking. I didn't jus loose a cousin I lost a best friend. I lost someone who had the biggest heart in the world to be so small. I lost someone who's smile could brighten up a whole room. Whenever I think of her I want to be able to look up in the sky and know the sunlight is her smile telling me everything is going to be excellent. Through the toughest battles I will make it for not only myself but for my partner in crime as well. Jus for Daijha I will go to Los Angeles jus because that's all she ever dreamed of doing.

“ I first met my friend Regina's niece Daijha about 6 years ago. I was aware of her having CF. But I didn't know what to expect. First of all she walked up ALL 4 flights of stairs with no complaint or hesitation and when she walked in...she was literally like a ray of sunshine! I just remember her being all smiles and having this bubbly and warm personality. She was a pleasure to be around. And I thank God for the pleasure of having met her. Her illness in NO way defined who she was and what she could and couldn't do. My heart goes out to her family. May God comfort and strengthen you during this very difficult time. And for now on, whenever the sun peaks through the clouds, just know that's God's newest Angel brightening up the heavens with her smile. God bless you..
