“ Nix, i'm sorry I haven't been a good friend. Last time we spoke was November 2018. Still had each other on social media, than everything started going on with me, than this pandemic. I thought about you tonight, I thought I would reach out. Then I saw the last time you were on Instagram was three years ago. So I went to Facebook, and then I saw the worst news. You passed away in February 2019. My heart hurts so bad. I'm so sorry for not keeping in touch. You were so good to me, and a great friend. Just hearing this almost 3 years later, I can't stop crying. Rest In Peace my friend. I'll always remember you. I'm sorry for being a horrible friend.

“ Lady Nicole Smith...

Your passing has really hit the heart of the community you used to be part of. You were unforgettable. Full of life, spirit, passion and courage to speak your thoughts and beliefs. Your contributions were always an interesting read and your makeup tutorials got me googling things I never thought I'd catch myself doing! An influential lady you were and sad to see you're no longer with us. Send our love to our other friend who departed, Joel. You're both missed. ❤️

“ Nichole brought joy to many people's lives with her lively online presence. Though I was never lucky enough to meet her in person, I always looked forward to talking with her online through platforms like Blab. She was a treasure -- best wishes to her family and friends, who must be hurting even worse right now.

“ Dear Nicole's Family,
I want to share my memory with the strong willed funny off the cusp Nicole Smith affectionately known to all of us as Nikki. I first met her on a media site called Blab. She was actually the first person I met on Blab and was very warm, funny, a little feisty and very welcoming. She made me feel comfortable for I had no idea what I was suppose to do and she took the time to help me with my social anxiety and showed me the ropes on Blab. She had such a command with her presence with anyone who came into contact with her. This world needs more people like her in it and it's an absolute tragedy that she was taken away from us too soon, but I want you to know that she was absolutely a wonderful wonderful human being and having her in your life you were truly blessed no matter who you were. The world will be a little bit sadder without her in it but she already left a legacy of acceptance of who you are and that is something to hold onto.

“ Nikki was a beautiful soul. Kind hearted and so much fun to talk to. Although I only knew her online, I could feel a connection to her and will miss not being able to reach out to her in person. May God rest her soul and bring peace to her loved ones left behind.
